Introduction to Accreditation

Healthcare Organizations should be places of safety not only for patients but also for staff and other stakeholders. Quality and patient safety at Blood banks / Centre is of great interest to government bodies, NGOs, insurance agencies, professional organizations representing healthcare workers and patients. Accreditation focuses on establishing quality and safety in relation to predetermined standards. Accreditation encourages healthcare organization to pursue continual excellence.

In India, Health Systems currently operates within an environment of rapid social, economical and technical changes. Such changes raise the concern for the quality of health care. Blood banks/ blood centres are an integral part of health care system. Accreditation would be the single most important approach for improving the quality of blood banks. Accreditation of blood banks/ blood centres strives to improve the quality and safety of collecting, processing, testing, transfusion and distribution of blood and blood products.

According to ISQua "A self-assessment and external peer review process used by health and social care organisations to accurately assess their level of performance in relation to established standards and to implement ways to continuously improve the health or social care system."

The blood bank accreditation program was started in the year 2007, at that time very few countries had this program. In the year 2007, NACO supported NABH to start this program. The special significance of this program includes quality standards in all areas including collections, processing, testing, compatibility, transfusions, hemovigilance and quality assurance, which includes enforcement of complete regulatory processes and national guidelines thus ensuring high quality of patient care with supply of safe blood to the right patient in right time and right quantities which boosts confidence among the patients at national and international level under medical tourism initiatives. The targeted customers include standalone blood banks which has very less knowledge of quality management system, they would benefit the most as this will impose confidence to the patients.
